Address of Rep. W. M. Abbitt Before Woman's Club of Appomatt

Representative Watkins M. Abbitt delivered an informative address at a dinner meeting of the Woman's Club of Appomattox, Friday, March 7, at 7:00 P. M. We are happy to present below excerpts from Mr. Abbitt's remarks.

There are many problems in our national life, but in my opinion, one of the great issues which confronts this country is the threat to our economy posed by the growing bureaucracy in Washington. We are witnessing a continual growth in big government year after year. We see today the biggest peacetime budget in all our history. We see inflation sapping the vitals of our economy and we are offered little prospect for curbing of federal expenditures unless a real, honest-to-goodness effort is made on the part of our people to impress upon government the necessity for holding the line against further increases.

No greater problem confronts our country today than the problem of protecting our national economy. Without this, all the others seem to fade into insignificance. If we do not have a strong and prosperous America, we cannot survive in view of the world situation today. If our economy fails, there is no need for talking of building a new and greater America; if our economy falters, then the plans for improving the standing of all Americans had been defeated. It is vital to our very existence as a nation of free people that every possible effort be made to preserve our national solvency, to cut back on the cost of operating our nation and to see that no further powers are granted the federal government.

Another great problem and equally as important to the future of our great country if we are to remain a free people is the necessity of curbing the octopus-like usurpation of power of the judicial and executive branches of the federal government.

The creeping socialistic invasion of state and local power by the federal government must be stopped before it turns this nation into an al-out socialistic welfare state. The hour is already late and unless our people awaken and realize the seriousness of the situation, we will soon see our way of life taken from us and the liberties and freedoms that were wrought out for us by our forebearers devoured by the octopus-like federal government that we have allowed to be established.

In the very recent past, we have seen the judicial arm of the federal government attempt to strike down the customs, habits, mores and traditions of our people by usurpation of authority that they never had, authority that was specifically retained by our founding fathers for the people themselves and the individual sovereign states.

That was just one of many such incidents when the judicial branch of the federal government has by usurpation of power and authority attempted to amend the Constitution and free the Constitution and by judicial fiat write into legislation the personal, political philosophy of the individual members of the court. This same court is gradually taking over the legislative and executive functions of the government.

There is a most important bill pending in the present session of the Jenner Bill which was introduced by Senator Jenner of Indiana, which has for its purpose the curbing of the Supreme Court in certain limited fields of activity. While this bill does not go nearly far enough in stopping the court in its arrogation of power unto itself, it is a good first step in attempting to preserve the rights of the people, the sovereignty of our state and the power of the legislative branch of the federal government to conduct affairs of the government in the legislative field.

I. It deals with investigative functions of Congress.

II. The security program of the executive branch of the federal government.

III. State anti-subversive legislation.

IV. Home rule over local schools.

V. The right of a state to regulate the practice of law as it affects the individual state.

You will see from this that the laws does not deal with the education or integration problem, the Girard case and many instances of which the Supreme Court has gone into new fields of activity.

One of the important questions confronting the Congress this session is the so-called federal aid to education program proposed by the Eisenhower Administration. This is a most important question not from the standpoint of the amount of money to be expended or the need for better educational opportunities for our children but in passing upon the President's proposal a decision will be made as to whether or not the public schools are to be operated, maintained and controlled by the localities and the states or whether our public schools will be eventually turned over to the federal government.

The schools of this great country of ours have been a great bulwark for our way of life. They have been the foundation stone of our democracy. We can but know that, if the federal government gradually takes over the financial burden of our public schools, so will they gradually take over the control. It is not possible to distribute federal funds for education without the imposition of an increasing measure of federal control in matters of educational policy. Local control of education is fundamental to the American democracy. It is necessary that education be adapted to local needs. It is necessary that we have a sense of local responsibility for its successful execution. To remove the responsibility of educating our children from the local level will necessarily and unavoidably greatly

The weaken democracy at the grass roots. The separation of education and the federal government, so far as primary and secondary schools are concerned, is as important as the principle of separation of church and state. For many years there has been a general trend toward centralization of power in Washington. There is now an all-out effort to federalize the schools and nationalize the lives of all American citizens.

Many people supporting this legislation will not admit this is true, but the vast majority of its supporters are those who desire the concentration of power in Washington and the centralization of all government at the national capital. All of us believe that adequate education of American youth is essential to the preservation of the republic and to the welfare of the nation. I am convinced that this opportunity can be provided in communities and states more satisfactorily and more equitably to both than by the federal government.

The federal government has a national debt of approximately $272 billion. Apparently there is no hope in the foreseeable future that this debt will be reduced in any appreciable amount. It is saddening to see on all sides grasping bureaucrats and people who believe in centralized power trying to reach out on behalf of the federal government to continue to take over functions and obligations of the states and local communities. We are now at the crossroads. We are about to see this country embark on the long-time journey into the field of local public education. It is disheartening to me to see this administration sponsor such a program.

Truthfully, the 1958 budget of the federal government is such a bizarre combination of fantasy, mysticism and irresponsibility that it astonishes and bewilders one. Only a person of the necessity and urgency of stopping the growth of the federal octopus. This program will needs add another tentacle to the octopus of federal monstrosity.

Important legislation to come before the last session of the 85th Congress which is this year:

1. The so-called Jenner Bill.
2. Federal aid to education.

President Eisenhower has proposed to let the federal government launch into an all-out public education assistance program to the states and the localities. He desires to put the federal government into the business of educating the youth of this country. He has requested Congress to appropriate funds to make grants to the states and the localities and to make direct grants to colleges and universities. In addition, the proposal sets up a program of federal scholarships for high school graduates for financial assistance for their attendance at college. Actually the program is a most far-reaching one and includes, in addition to the above, direct assistance payments by the federal government to teachers and professors in colleges and universities teaching sciences and foreign language. This is an all embracing program of federal aid to primary and secondary education. It is a great step toward nationalizing and socializing the school system of America.

3. The continuation of foreign aid is another vitally important matter to be determined by the present Congress. Here is an attempt on the part of this administration to place upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of America the financial and economical responsibility of practically all of the free countries of the world. It is shocking to know that since July 1, 1945, there has been appropriated by the federal government, $70 billion for foreign aid. In addition to this, there has been spent on the United States armed forces the sum of $262 billion as of June 30, 1957. I doubt very much if any of our people realize the enormity of this sum. I only wish that the greater part had been spent economically and for the best interest of the defense of America.

I do not feel that it is the duty or obligation of the American taxpayers to carry the financial burden of the world upon their shoulders. I feel that our economic stability is just as important to us as our military defense. If we collapse economically, if inflation brings on monetary chaos, then we are lost. We can no longer survive as a free nation. Our people cannot continue to carry the oppressive tax load we are now carrying and remain solvent. We cannot adequately run federal spending so long as we continue an enormous foreign aid program.

KNOW THE WEATHER
By E. H. Sims

Why isn't the earth bombarded with space debris, fragments, meteors, etc.? Since it is known that such objects fly constantly through space, and frequently strike the moon, why is it they don't strike the earth?

Fortunately, the earth's weather problem does not include the problem of a fragment storm, or a heavy fall of such matter. Yet is is true that such meteors do crash into the moon by the thousands.

The earth's layer of gases (which is also our weather) saves us from the bombardment. The bombardment actually exists, and meteors and space fragments are hurtling toward us, into the atmosphere, constantly.

But as they reach our atmosphere, the friction caused by their exceedingly fast passage through the layer of gases surrounding the earth creates intense heat. The heat reaches such a degree that the fragments and meteors burn up and disintegrate.

Only rarely does one survive long enough to strike the earth. But occasionally they do.

About The Home

Around your home . . . . . —
By Frances Dell

It seems that Tuesday's chore— ironing — may soon be a thing of the past. According to many leading textile authorities, this dream of millions of home owners the world over, is not only possible, but it is only a matter of a short time before wash and wear clothes in many cotton and synthetic fabrics will need no ironing. Even that necessary touch-up of today will be a thing of the past.

This new era will mean tailored suits, dresses, and sportswear coming from the home washer and tumble dryer as if freshly pressed. The elimination of ironing is made possible by the built-in qualities of the fabrics, plus new methods of garment construction. In this new age, even the trimmings are to be designed to take the beating a washing machine gives them.

There are many fabric combinations in these clothes. These include orlon-cotton, dacron-rayon, and dacron-orlon. Many of the cotton do not develop seam packers even after repeated launderings.

The no-iron finish on cottons is applied by a chemical process in which the fiber is impregnated with a resin. The method was introduced soon after the Second World War. It has been improved to such an extent that it will last the entire life of the garment. There is one problem: some few people have an alergic reaction to the resins used to treat the fibers.Manufacturers are working on this problem and may have it licked.

Those wonder fabrics may be starched, but then they must be pressed. Because the chemicals give the fabric more body, it is usually not necessary to use any starch.

When this new treatment of fabrics reaches the point where it is used on household linens as well as clothes, women will be saved an untold amount of hard and tiresome work.

DAIRY RESEARCH CITED BY VPI SPECIALIST

Do cows prefer soft water? W. S. Griffith, dairy specialist at VPI, says the answer apparently is "no."

Researchers at the State College of Washington conducted a test with 27 cows to determine the value of softened water as compared with that of hard water for dairy cows.

The test shows that the cows drank about 102 pounds of water per day regardless of whether it was hard or soft. There was no difference in milk production between cows drinking hard and cows drinking soft water.

The investigators say there does not seem to be any known physiological basis for expecting superior performance from softened water. Therefore, Griffith says, Virginia dairymen need not consider the purchase of water softeners to treat hard water for dairy cows.

Griffith also reports on another test at the University of Florida, which indicates that crimped oats are superior to whole oats in dairy cattle feeds. In the test, crimped oats were fed at the rate of 2 pounds per day to 8-month-old calves and the yearling heifers and dry cows ate 5 pounds per day.

When whole oats were fed, from 2.98% to 12.06% of them were recovered in the feces. However, when crimped oats were fed these losses were lowered to 0.77% or less.

NEGRO EXTENSION NEWS

The Appomattox Local Farm Agent announces the following activities of interest to all farmers in this area.

The annual Farmers Conferences will be held March 25, 1958, at 9:30 A. M. until noon, at the Carver-Price High School. The principal speakers for the conference will be Mrs. Thelma T. Howlett, District Agent—subject, "Food Comes First"; Mr. E. W. Carson, District Agent, subject: "Local Farm Situation;" Mr. A. B. Lyons, Forestry Specialist, subject: "Forestry As a Crop."

We are also happy to announce the following activities, which will appear on the program in the near future: The State Advisory Board Award Program to be held on the farm of F. E. Owens, Route 1, Suffolk, Va.; State 4-H Short Course, June 16-20, Virginia State College; The Farm and Home Week Conference, July 8-10, at Virginia State College; Garden Lover's Short Course, July 15-17, Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va.; State 4-H Wildlife and Conservation Camp, August 5-8, Virginia State College; The State Agricultural Advisory Board Meeting, September 3-4, King William County, Va.

Any farmer who is interested in attending any of these meetings, please contact your farm agent in advance, for transportation arrangements.

FARM NEWS

Feeding Swine on Concrete

Swine producers who do an outstanding job of feeding and management, and who have good pigs, may find the use of pig parlors, in which the pigs are grown from weaning to market on concrete, practical and profitable.

As a guide for farmers who are considering pig parlors, animal husbandmen at VPI have listed these comparisons with a pasture system.

Pasture may cut the protein supplement cost 1-3 to 1-2, reducing the total feed bill by 3% to 10%, but new research raises the question whether pasture saves much feed over feeding on concrete if dry-lot rations are properly fortified with vitamins, antibiotics, and minerals. Fortifying rations costs several dollars per ton of feed.

"Clean green ground" is the best and cheapest method of disease and parasite prevention and control for most growers. Disease and parasites can be controlled on concrete as well as on pasture, but it takes better feeding and management to do it. A serious disease outbreak among hogs concentrated in a small area can be disastrous. By feeding fortified rations, using pressure water agitators and steam cleaning, diseases and parasites can be effectively controlled in dry lot.

Initial cash outlay is lower for movable buildings and equipment on pasture. On concrete, if several hundred market hogs are produced annually, the per hog cost is reduced even though the initial investment is higher.

Hogs spread their own manure on pastures and in the corn field. On concrete, pens should be cleaned daily. The high value of manure will be lost if it is not hauled out and spread on the land.

On pasture, posts and woven wire must be erected, and temporary fences have to be moved from time to time to take advantage of "clean green ground". On concrete there is no fence-building problem.
